Jilleen is a strong advocate for her patients and is consistently focused on improving their quality of life while maintaining their safety. She enjoys working with all populations and the family systems that encompass her clients. She prefers to utilize a collaborative and strengths-based approach to include the family/community and professional supports whenever possible and appropriate.

She has experience working with many different populations, including older adults, individuals with mental health diagnoses, children and families, domestic violence survivors, substance abuse, foster care, and individuals/families in crisis and/or those who have experienced trauma. During her work at the Northwest Hospital Geropsychiatric Center (Seattle, Wash.), Jilleen completed biopsychosocial assessments for her patients, co-facilitated intensive outpatient psychotherapy groups for older adults with mood disorders, and coordinated discharge plans for patients.

Jilleen graduated from the University of Washington with a master of social work degree with a clinical contextual and child welfare focus. Her undergraduate studies from Humboldt State University were in sociology and women's studies.
